Canadian Red Cross Society

On Monday of this week thousands upon thousands of recruits to the Canadian Red Cross army of volunteer workers marched out in full strength to rally their fellow Canadians to the support of the national war drive.

With the battle cry, "The need is urgent—dig in and give," they are spreading their efforts as a digger over the entire Dominion and are appealing for contributions, large and small, to make up the three million dollars which Red Cross officials state must be obtained if the organization is to embark upon a duplication—and enlargement of the work it is doing during the last war.

In the few days that have passed since the campaign was launched, it has been possible for canvassers only to search the surface of the territory that is to be covered thoroughly to realize headquarters already that people have sent in their contributions without waiting for voluntary workers to call. It is hoped that others will follow their example.

Mrs. M. C. Nicholson was a Calgary visitor last week-end.

Why Canada Fights

Canada has allied herself with Great Britain and France in the fight to crush Hitlerism and all that Hitlerism stands for, in the hope that as an outcome of the conflict peace and security for all nations may be guaranteed for a long time to come.

The foregoing in a general way sums up the average Canadian's reply to the question: "Why are we in this war?"

The reply may sum up the reasons in a very general way, but it is essential that Canadians understand specifically and remind themselves constantly of the reason for the necessity of crushing Hitlerism and this can best be done by a careful and analytical review of the events of the past six years in Europe and Hitler's record of broken promises.

This has been very ably set forth by the London Times and reprinted in pamphlet form under the title: "The Grammar of Aggression", in calendar form. A summary of excerpts of speeches made by Herr Hitler as Chancellor of the German Reich, combined with his various acts of aggression during the period under review constitute an indictment so clear that one can readily understand why war was inevitable.

Submitted in brief form the following extracts from Hitler's speeches and his contrasting actions tell a story which cannot be controverted:

Berlin, Feb. 10, 1933—The first and best point of the Government's programme is that we won't die and we won't swindle.

Berlin, May 17, 1933—The German people have no thought of invading any country.

Oct. 14, 1933—Germany left the League of Nations.

Berlin, Oct. 24, 1933—There are Germans and Poles in Europe, and they ought to live together in agreement. The Poles cannot think of Europe without the Germans and the Germans cannot think of Europe without the Poles.

Berlin, Nov. 10, 1933—When has the German people ever broken its word?

The Rights Of Others

Berlin, Jan. 13, 1934.—The assertion that the German Reich plans to coerce the Austrian State is absurd and cannot be substantiated or proved. . . . The assertion of the Austrian Government that from the side of the Reich an attack would be undertaken or planned I must emphatically reject. . . . The German Reich is always ready to hold out a hand for the free-will of Austrian Germans. . . . After the Saar question has been settled the German Government is ready to accept not only the letter but the spirit of the Locarno pact.

March 16, 1935—Germany announced cessation.

Berlin, May 21, 1935—Both we National-Socialists and the Bolsheviks are convinced that there is a gulf between us which can never be bridged.

So far as ever this Bolshevism draws Germany into its clutches we are the deadliest and most fanatical enemies. . . . Germany neither intends nor wishes to interfere in the internal affairs of Austria, or to annex Austria, or to conclude an Anschluss.

March 7, 1936—Germany reoccupied the Rhineland and defouled Locarno.

Berlin, March 7, 1936—After three years I believe that I can regard the struggle for German equality as concluded to-day. I believe, moreover, that thereby the first and foremost reason for our withdrawal from European collective collaboration has ceased to exist. We have no territorial demands to make in Europe.

Nuremberg, Sept. 15, 1936—We see in Bolshevism a bestial, mad doctrine which is a threat to us. . . . These are two worlds. In Bolshevist Russia there is devastation, grim murder and ruin. Here is laughter, happiness and beauty.

Berlin, Jan. 30, 1937—The period of so-called-surprises is now over.

Berlin, Feb. 20, 1938—The Polish State respects the national conditions in this country, and Danzig and Germany respect Polish rights. Thus it has been possible to find the way to an understanding which, emanating from Danzig, in spite of the assertions of many mischief makers, has succeeded in removing all friction between Germany and Poland, and made it possible to work together in true amity.

The Last Demand

March 11, 1938—Germany invaded Austria.

Berlin, Sept. 26, 1938—The Sudetenland is the last territorial claim which I have to make in Europe. . . . I have assured Mr. Chamberlain, and I emphasize it now, that when this problem is solved Germany has no more territorial problems in Europe. I have further assured him that at the moment when Czechoslovakia has solved its other problems—that is, when the Czechs shall have come to an understanding with their other minorities—I shall not be interested in the Czech State any more, and that, so far as I am concerned, I can guarantee it.

Berchtesgaden, Jan. 1, 1939—In general we have but one wish—that in the coming year we may be able to make our contribution to this general pacification of the whole world.

Berlin, Jan. 30, 1939—Only the war mongers think there will be a war. I think there will be a long period of peace.

March 15, 1939—Germany seized Czechoslovakia.

March 21, 1939—Germany annexed Memel.

Berlin, April 28, 1939—The Czech nation, with the sum total of its skill and ability, its industry, its diligence, its love of its native soil and of its own national heritage, deserves our respect. . . . That which the best and wisest Czechs have struggled for decades to attain is, as a matter of course, granted to this people in the National-Socialist German Reich—namely, the right to their own nationality and the right to foster this nationality and to revive it.

Aug. 21, 1939—Germany signed a pact with Russia.

Sept. 1, 1939—German invaded Poland.

Berlin, Sept. 1, 1939—I will not war against women and children. I have ordered my air force to restrict itself to attacks on military objectives. The bombing of Polish open towns began on the first day of the war.

Sept. 3, 1939—The Athens was sunk.

Shopping Is Difficult

Permit Is Required For Purchase Of Clothing In Germany

If you were in Germany-at-war and wanted to buy a pair of socks, don't think you could simply enter a men's furnishing store and buy socks at a price and color suited to your needs.

If you, milady, felt you needed an extra pair of "undies", don't think the saleslady at a dry goods store would serve you without further ado. In either case you would be asked:

"Where is your 'bezugschein'?" It has become a magic word.

It is a certificate entitling the holder to buy a stated article and sometimes it is hard to persuade a hard-boiled official that one needs new socks or underwear.

All over the country and in every city at numerous places, there are "war economy offices." If the officials can be persuaded of the absolute need of the article in question, he will issue a "bezugschein" or authority to buy, which is taken up by the shopkeeper where the purchase is made.

So long as a man can call two pairs of socks his own, he must do some tall explaining before he is given permission to purchase still another pair.

Owners of restaurants are also frequent visitors to the local or district war economy office. They must be able to demonstrate that, despite unusual care, the wear and tear of their serviettes and table clothes has been such that replacement is essential for keeping up the good name of the establishment.

Hospitals are in a preferential class. The authorities realize that in war time it is more essential than ever that utmost cleanliness prevail. Hence hospitals find no difficulty in obtaining "bezugschein" for all the textiles of various kinds they may need.

The world's largest power dam is said to be that on the Dnieper river in Soviet Russia. It was built by American engineers.

The United States has 495,000,000 acres of forest land.

Many Animal Refugees

Pedigreed Horses And Dogs Sent To America From Europe

Refugees from the war, pedigreed horses and dogs valued by European shippers at more than $1,000,000, are finding a haven in North America. Transportation officials at New York said all records for such incoming cargoes have been broken since the war started. Horse and dog lovers have been shipping them to this continent to save the animals from destruction or the breeds from deterioration.

Noted British Painter Dead

Sigmund Goetze Exhibited At Royal Academy When Quite Young

Sigmund Christian Goetze, British painter, died at his London home, on his 73rd birthday.

Goetze, who painted large canvas panel pictures at the British Foreign Office, complained at a banquet three years ago that the "artificiality" of modern women was a handicap to art.

"We poor moderns," he said, "have to seek inspiration from shorn locks, plucked eyebrows, painted lips and bloody fingernails."

Noted for his portraits of well-known persons, his landscapes and paintings of religious subjects, Goetze first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1882 at the age of 22.

In 1938 he received a gold medal "for distinguished services to sculpture" from the Royal Society of British Sculptors.

Rapidly the winter shut in and the frost strengthened. Farther and farther out the ice sheet reached in the lake and, near the shore, became so thick that they raised their nets. But the big cache was now piled high with frozen fish.

Twice, when the river closed, they drove the dogs down to the cabin on the Talking to find all well with John and Heather and no news from McQueen.

And then, at last, came the Montagnais "Moon When the Snow Hangs in the Throat," and, in the middle of December, Alan and Noel started with the dogs to search for the headwater lakes of the Koksoak.

Over the barrens flanking the valley of the Sinking Lakes, they travelled into the northeast. But it was a long-faced Noel who trotted behind the eager dogs over the sparkling tundra.

"No one evar go into dis cuntree and come back," he reminded Alan as they stood on a high barren and gazed over the undulating white waste to the north and east, seemingly aflame as the sun slanted across its limitless expanse.

"Well," said Alan, dropping his mitten slung to his neck by a thong and wiping the rime from his face with a bare hand, "someone always has to be first, eh, Rough?"

For days they travelled north of the valley of the Sinking Lakes but, in that direction, beyond the dim blue hills they had often seen from the valley, they found no water courses flowing north; no headwater lakes.

"Noel!" he cried. "We've found it."

One morning they headed into the southeast. In the sparsely wooded valleys, snow-white Arctic hares, their long ears tipped with black, jumped from willow thickets to race away at the coming of the dog-team. Once, at a distance, three curious white foxes danced grotesquely on the snow, inspecting the approach of the team, until the excited dogs, getting their scent, set up a frenzied yelping which drove them away over the tundra, like wisps of white smoke.

Because of the wood, the boys had stopped in a small valley, where a stream headed, to boil their kettle. After eating, they continued south and came out of the fold in the hills to higher country. As Alan, who was leading the team, reached the lip of the valley and looked far into the east, he raised his hands with a shout.

"Noel!" he cried. "Look at that lake over there! We've found it!" Noel joined him and the two gazed in amazement across the tundra. There, miles away to the east, beyond the low hills of the foreground, reached the level, white shell of an enormous lake, until it was lost in the haze of the distance.

"Why, it's as big as Lake Bienville on the Great Whale, Noel!" exclaimed Alan excitedly. "This must be one of the lakes in the old men's tales."

The Indian stood in awe, gazing at the white reaches of the distant lake. Far to the north and south stretched the shimmering floor of snow and wind-scoured ice, and into the east, until it merged with the horizon.

"Eet ees ver' beeg lak," he said. "Big rivers flow out of dis."

"And that river must be a headwater of the Koksoak!" cried Alan. "We're over the Height-of-Land. The river all run north, here! We've found it, Noel! We've found it!" That night the boys camped on the shore of the great lake in the wind break of a stand of black spruce. While the dogs lay curled in the sleep-holes, Alan and Noel talked beside a roaring fire.

"We'll travel right around this lake until we find the outlet, Noel. Then we'll hunt to find a way to get into it with the canoes from the Sinking Lakes."

"Mebbe dis lak' not flow into de beeg riviere."

"Noel, this lake is surely the headwaters of the big river, or one of its branches. It's got to be flowing north as the river does. And we'll soon find out."

Snug in their caribou sleeping bags, the tired boys slept beside their fire. In the morning, they started along shore over the wind-brushed ice in search of the outlet. All day they travelled rapidly north until, shortly after noon, when the light died, they were at the end of the lake, but as yet had found no outlet which would lead, as they hoped, into the north and the great Koksoak.

The next morning they saw what appeared to be a low island lying off the shore. Cutting in beyond the island they found that the lake reached to the north, like the fingers on a hand, in three separate bays. And from each of these ran an outlet.

"Look, Noel," said Alan, as they stood on a low hill and followed the channels of the three streams with the binoculars. "These outlets run right into the north through a flat valley and must join, later. I tell you we've on Koksoak water."

The east the ridges all run north and south—not a break in them. We've found it, boy! We're on the Koksoak!"

The Indian nodded his head in agreement.

"Now we'll follow the east shore and see if this is the main discharge. Some of these lakes have two. But I'm positive no water could run to the east; from the lay of the country, it's bound to travel north."

With the boys riding the toboggan, away galloped the dogs along the eastern shore. In an hour, looking across the wide expanse of ice into the southwest they could barely see the white hills from which they had discovered the great lake. In places, the hard snow, carved by the wind, ripped away for miles like white waves; in places the ice was scored almost clean of its snow blanket, making sledging a delight. On, up the east shore, the eager dogs took them at a gallop. But at noon the sun in the south was gradually smothered in haze. To the north banks of lead-colored clouds piled above the white hills.

"Snow comin'," announced Noel, as they stopped to give the dogs a breather.

"Sure enough!" agreed Alan. "What do you say to crossing the lake to the camp we had two nights back in that thick timber? It may be an old drifter and last for days. With the hills running as they do, there's no outlet from this side. After the blow we'll make sure."

"Eet ees far across there. We have to hurry."

"But we've got the dogs to make it. Haven't we, Rough, old boy?"

Alan went to the great dog sprawled on the wind-hammered snow, and rubbed his ears as he looked into the slant eyes.

"You take the team across this lake before that snow comes, Rough?"

Rough answered with a red laugh as his breath rose like smoke on the biting air.

CHAPTER IX.

Back in their windbreak of black spruce, the boys hoped in for the storm. For three days the "drifter" pounded the barrens, driving every living thing, furred or feathered, to the sanctuary of the spruce or to sun burrows in the snow. The morning of the fourth day when the sun, flanked by two brass balls of sun-dogs or false suns, lifted above the horizon while the skies to the north and west were still a dense blue, the wind had been scoured of snow. With the stinging air shot with glittering snow crystals, their frozen breaths trailing behind them like smoke, men and dogs started for the head of the lake. Along the shores the wind had heaped huge drifts but much of the lake ice had been scoured of snow. Camping at the head of the lake, the following day, they started over the young snow for the shoulders of the nearest hill to search for a spring water route from the Sinking Lakes.

Here in the timber the boys broke trail on snowshoes ahead of the team for there was three feet of new snow and, without firm footing, the dogs wallowed to their shoulders. Everywhere, the night before, the wild creatures had travelled in search of food after the storm.

At last Alan discovered a water route to the big lake, by way of a chain of ponds lying on the Height-of-Land. The object of their exploring trip was accomplished.

The Montagnais "Great Moon" of January with its searing winds and January when the lake ice split with the howl, the wind had been scoured of snow. The contraction of the frost, rode over the barrens, followed by the "Moon of the Eagle." Night after night the aurora lit the white tundra and streamers of pearly mist-wreathed snows lay beneath, stars that shone through with a spectral blue. "The Spirits of the Dead at Play," the Eskimos call the dancing lights of the polar heavens.

Often fearful for the safety of the man and girl wintering on the Talking-trail behind their galloping dogs, Alan and Noel rode the ice dogs.

More than once during the winter, John had crossed strange snowshoe trails. Some were the bear paw prints of the Montagnais and some the long shape of the coast Cree. The cabin on the Talking was being watched. McQueen was hiding his time—waiting to follow the canoe that would start in the spring.

May Not Be Right

Two Doctors Tell Professions Which Make Good Husbands

Chemical engineers make the best husbands, only about ten per cent. of the women who marry them being really miserable. They are closely followed by ministers, college professors, and football coaches. Among the worst husbands, on the other hand, are barbers, musicians, travelling salesmen, and plumbers, whose capacity for annoying their wives is terrific. Dentists, lawyers, and advertising men are about halfway down the list—not good, not bad. Writers are not mentioned at all, possibly because their records are just too appalling for print. We learned these rather odd facts from a book called "Predicting Success or Failure in Marriage," by a couple of doctors named Burgess and Cottrell, who spent nine years and sent out more than five hundred questionnaires in getting them together. The reason ladies are happiest with people like teachers and ministers, the authors say, is that these men are apt to stay in one place, where they can be watched, while the others drift around, getting in jams. All this seems reasonable enough, but there is one other little point that keeps on bothering us. How about the other side of the picture? How about the boys who married all these confiding ladies? Are they happy? We doubt it. Show us, we say, a wife who will fill in a questionnaire about her private life and mail it back to a couple of strange doctors, and we will show you a husband who wishes he were in the Foreign Legion.—The New Yorker.

It would be a different world if only common sense was really common.

"Are geniuses good husbands?" "Better ask my wife." 2333

National Education Week

Last week, November 6th to November 10th was National Education week in both United States and Canada. This marks the first occasion in which the dates for this event have coincided in both countries. In view of this fact, and in the light of present world conditions, the following statement, issued by two hundred European educationists at Undersager, Sweden in April, carries particular significance.

The purpose of the gathering was to consider how Moral Re-Armament, through education, could bring stability and security to a world whose foundations were trembling. Their statement, formulated at that time, follows:

"The problem of today is to recover the moral and spiritual bases of society. We have to find the way to set free all the creative power in the world without the accompanying danger of its being turned into destruction. The present state of civilization is making it increasingly clear that we are morally unfitted to survive."

Mrs. F. Otto visited for the past week with her daughter, Mrs. P. R. Dobson of Calgary.
